Aqeel Syed, Associate Dean for LSST Luton, said: 'I can't thank the LSST students enough for their achievements and for raising so much money in such a short space of time. I am confident this experience has provided them with important skills that will serve them well in the workplace too.'

Katie Richardson, Regional Fundraising Coordinator at Keech Hospice Care, said: 'We're very grateful for the support of the London School of Science and Technology. As a charity, Keech depends on around 70 per cent of the funding for its care services to come from the community for its survival. All the charity's services are offered free of charge, 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. Donations like these will ensure we can keep providing all our services to our adults and children at a time they need us most.'
